PATHETIC STORY OF WOMAN'S LIFE

Toiled and Saved For Sake Of Others.

A MUTE AND UNSUNG HEROINE

Born in Poverty and Only a Kitchen Maid, She Left a Nice Sum.

VISIONS SHE NEVER REALIZED

This is the story of one of those humblest of God's creatures, whose life was spent in penury and toil that others might have abundant life. It is just the simple story of an humble woman's life, the prototype of which inspired Gray's "Some village Hampden, that, with dauntless breast, The little tyrant of his fields withstood, Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest, Some Cromwell guiltless of his country's blood."

Susanna Hostettler, an Ohio woman, who died recently, was one of the mute and unsung heroines of life. The simple headstone that marks her final resting place records merely the dates of her birth and death. No high-flung epitaph or eulogy tells the story of her virtues or her greatness, for Susanna was only a kitchen maid.

Born in poverty, Susanna was denied even the advantages of a common school education. From earliest childhood her portion in life was work, and, meekly accepting the gift of the gods, she quietly slipped the yoke about her neck and stepped on the treadmill designed for her from the beginning of time.

As if the handicap of environment and fate were insufficient, Susanna bore the stamp also of an ineradicable hereditary taint that in time removed both father and mother, and two sisters as well; and still she toiled on under her burden of grief and sorrow in order to be able to care for her other sister, also afflicted with the same dire malady.

Sixteen long, grinding years passed, and then the fell disease stretched out its tentacles for Susanna, and found her easy, if reluctant, prey. She died only a few days ago at the age of 49, and then it was disclosed that she had left a will. The facetious and gossipy wondered idly what Susanna had that prompted her to leave a will and testament. When the document was brought into the court for probate it developed that this Spartan soul had accumulated an estate of nearly $8,000. From her meager wages, out of which there was a constant drain for assistance to her family, Susanna had saved, accumulated and invested wisely until the snug little fortune that was disclosed became hers.

The disposition of her hard-won competence discloses in true colors the nobility and lovable character of the woman who had been known in life only as a scullery maid. The income from the estate is to be given during her lifetime to her unmarried sister. Thereafter the income is to go to her married sister, and when the sands of time have ceased for her, one-half of her little fortune is to go absolutely to the library of the high school in the little town of DeGraff, where Susanna was born and in which she died.

One half of the remainder is to go to the library of the Sunday school of the little church in the village of which her sisters are members, and the remaining one-fourth is to go to the Sunday School library of the church in the city of Bellefontaine, of which Susanna was a member for more than a quarter of a century.

This kitchen maid possessed a nobility of soul greater than which no philanthropist has ever shown. Doubtless during the dark days of toil, sickness and misery, Susanna dreamed her dreams. It is inconceivable that she did not regret the lack of education and the skill that might have been hers to earn more largely for the welfare of her beloved parents and sisters. The life that was denied her, the visions that she saw from her obscure station in life, she wanted to make real for others; so, after caring for her own during their lives, all of the Best Place For Repairs.

Two small boys were having a somewhat tough struggle and when one received an unexpectedly hard blow he exclaimed:
"If you don't look out you'll end up in a place that begins with H and ends with L!"

A school teacher, who was passing, on hearing the remark, scolded the boy severely for what he had said.
"Well," replied the boy, after a pause, "I'm sure I don't know what you're talking about. I am talking about a 'hospital.'"

Got "A Barrel of Days."
A Monroe county jury dealt out poetic justice to Tuck Pendegrift, tried here on a "blind tiger" charge on a change of venue from Lawrence county, and gave him a "barrel of days." According to the verdict returned by the jury, this is the same number of days that a barrel of beer contains bottles—144.

Pendegrift was charged with running a "blind tiger" at the "half-way" house between Bedford and Mitchell. (Bloomington, Ind.) Cor. New York Sun.
